Many professionals keep a library of industry standard images for use as references. It is common for marketing and advertising professionals to use Photoshop as an editing tool to create copies of those images with their own branding and stylization. Photoshop allows for complex, detailed editing of both images and video footage, as well as drawing, scanning, and 3D modeling. It has long been the premiere tool for image editing, and has been an industry standard since it was introduced in the mid-'90s. Adobe Photoshop is the most popular image editing software in the world, and the tool is so widely used that it has become a verb. It is common parlance to say that an image has been "photoshopped" or even just "shopped," meaning that it's been edited or manipulated. And although it isn't a new tool by any means, Photoshop has been gaining new functionality to keep up with changes in the digital world. Photoshop has been used in advertising for decades. It's a powerful tool that is only limited by your imagination, and it's especially helpful when it comes to inserting copy into images for use on billboards or bus shelters. It is a great tool for image creation and altering, as it uses a layer-based editing system that enables raster image creation and altering with multiple overlays that support transparency. Photoshop is used as a proofing tool for print. A printer can view and preview an image before printing it, and an advertiser can check the placement of headlines or other copy. As photography has advanced from film to digital, a new era of image creation has opened up. Digital photography lets you edit and manipulate images in all kinds of creative ways, and Photoshop is one of the best tools available. Photoshop is an industry standard that is used by many photographers to work with both digital and film-based images. It has some great features, such as watermarking, image retouching, and the ability to convert images to other formats, including PDFs. Q: How can I navigate to another page using a button in phonegap? In my iOS app, I have a form with two radio buttons, and when the form is submitted, I want it to take the user to a particular URL depending on which radio button is selected. A: For submitting a form, one solution is using PhoneGap's common form. For example, to submit an object named item1 and an array of items2, you could write: $.post(server, $("#itemForm").serialize(), function(response) { // handle response window.location.replace(it[1]); }, "text"); You'd need to declare a form like the following: You'd need to write the server-side code to handle all of these inputs. If you also need to handle the response differently depending on the radio button, you could also use a framework like Angular.js. Then the button could be a regular HTML button instead of a form button, and would submit the form and handle the response. For example, for the first radio button:

The Pen tool allows you to make selections, vector drawings, and more. The Pen is useful for drawing objects, editing small areas of an image, or making selections around shapes and objects. The Fill bucket allows you to use one of the thousands of pre-made Photoshop brushes to apply color to a filled area. The Fill options are a great tool for getting a smooth color out of anything: Colors like gradients and patterns help you produce unique effects. You can use gradients to make anything look like an oil painting, for example, or to make colors look like they are floating in space. The Eraser tool can be used to clean up a image by removing unwanted objects like dust, fingerprints, and drawing. The tool can remove only a small part of an image or a large area, but whichever area you remove is gone forever. The Eraser tool is very useful for removing unwanted objects from your images.A measure aimed at eliminating unnecessary handgun purchases will be on Minnesota's ballot in 2016. The "Guns Everywhere" measure, along with two others to address school safety and voter identification, was certified Wednesday by the Secretary of State's Office. The deadline for the Dec. 2 election is Nov. 30. The proposal, by Maryland-based Minnesotans for Compassionate Solutions, would ban handgun purchases for people who wouldn't otherwise be allowed to buy a firearm. It calls on Minnesota law enforcement agencies to negotiate agreements to allow people with violent felony convictions or extensive misdemeanor record convictions to make purchases. The measure also would ban home and vehicle gun sales to people under 21, require background checks for sales at gun shows, establish a waiting period for anyone buying a handgun, ban new "assault weapons" and require gun locks for all weapons. The $3 million, 10-point proposal would also add to Minnesota's criminal record database the fact that a person was convicted of a violent crime with a weapon. Results from a campaign to gather signatures to put the measure on the ballot revealed that 178,000 people supported the ban while 188,000 opposed it. Minnesota voters approved a ban on handgun ownership by constitutional amendment in 1988. The Legislature tried to reinstate that ban at the end of the last session but it failed on the last day of the legislative session. The proposal is similar to a 2013 ballot initiative in Maryland that also aimed to reinstate that state's outright ban on the purchase and ownership of handguns. Voters in Minnesota
