The aim of this study was to evaluate the use of carbon-11-labeled D-serine in noninvasive in vivo imaging of excitatory amino acid (EAA) receptors using positron emission tomography (PET). The secondary amine group of D-serine was radiolabeled by reaction with [11C]iodomethane ([11C]IM) with high radiochemical yield (30-40%) and the radiochemical purity (>99%) in approximately 50 min. Radioligand binding studies of [11C]D-serine in vitro and in vivo demonstrated specific, reversible and saturable binding to EAA receptors in the brain. [11C]D-serine and [11C]D-aspartate showed similar brain regional uptake patterns. Ex vivo analysis of rat brain sections using an autoradiogram showed similar brain regional uptake patterns of the two ligands. These results provide the first demonstration of noninvasive in vivo imaging of EAA receptors in the brain.2. The journey I shall not attempt to do a full recount of the climb up and down all the same rock faces that have been prominent throughout the whole of this challenge – we are all aware of the hundreds of photos that have gone viral by now and there are plenty of full descriptions to read through online. Having said all of that, a few photos will catch out for people without a full picture of what we were up to. We started off the journey in Bond Street Station by simply getting a train to Marylebone. Once there, we were directed to our first car park of the day, a small one that was literally on the edge of town. We then waited for a pick-up car 82138339de
