Q: Angular 2 Dynamically bind to parameters dynamically bind to change event I have a check box array and a switch. based on the values that I get from the first array, I should be able to dynamically bind the change event for the switches as I need. My Problem: I am getting the data from the service in my component.ts file and showing that in the first div of my html file. Now depending on the value of that data, I need to populate a second array of the same length. I have done that in the service.ts file. When I get back the array, I am not able to populate the second array in the component.ts file as I need and when I do the changes in the service.ts, I have to refresh the entire component to get the changes. I will be calling the service for this purpose. Is there a way I can get the changes only for the elements where the values are coming from first array. export class OrderComponent implements OnInit { order: Order = new Order(); selectedOption: Order[]; constructor(private route: Router, private productService: ProductService, private orderService: OrderService) { } ngOnInit() { this.route.params .switchMap(params => this.orderService.getOrder(params.orderId)) .subscribe(order => this.order = order); console.log(this.
