Calcium antagonists inhibit the release of neurotransmitters by blocking calcium influx across nerve terminals. These agents are also capable of blocking the transmission of action potentials by axons, smooth muscle and cardiac cells. They inhibit the proliferation of various animal cells, including those of the immune system. Although potentially useful for the treatment of cardiovascular and inflammatory diseases, their principal antimicrobial activity is against pathogenic bacteria. Calcium antagonists are effective antimicrobial agents against bacteria that cause sexually transmitted diseases (syphilis and gonorrhoea) and meningitis. The major mechanism appears to be a blockage of the influx of calcium into the bacterial cell.Copper-free Azine-Catalyzed Synthesis of Styrene-fused Alkaloids and Their Diels-Alder Reactions. A copper-free protocol for the synthesis of styrene-fused azine-decorated tetrahydroquinolines, which is a novel class of C1-symmetric and water-sensitive steric directing groups, is described. This method uses a simple azine-catalyzed condensation of 2-allyloxyarylhydrazines with 1,3-disubstituted alkynes. Application of these alkaloids as a diene in Diels-Alder reactions is also presented.Dortoy, Saint Petersburg Dortoy () is a locality (a part of the city of Leningrad) in Krasnogvardeysky District of Leningrad Oblast, Russia, located on the Moskva River. It is located southeast of Saint Petersburg, just east of the Dortmiet Hills. It is the starting point of the road to Dvortsy. A famous local product is smoked fish with the name "Dortmiete". History Before World War II, the village of Dortoy was a part of Sestroretsk Okrug of Leningrad Oblast. The history of the settlement dates back to 1718 when the sea lochs were filling with fish to be smoked. In 1740, the first fishing port Dortoy started to operate. After the Great Northern War, the village was unsuccessfully destroyed in 1764
