Its basic version, Adobe Lightroom 3, is an excellent introduction to the basics of digital photography, but as the program evolves, it has many of the professional features of Adobe Photoshop. Additional Elements and Lightroom plug-ins are available for Photoshop as well. Elements is currently at version 9, while Lightroom is at version 2.5. If you're familiar with Elements, Photoshop has many of the same features, although the interface looks radically different. Lightroom also has many of the same features as Photoshop. Figure 7-4 shows a few variations of the classic Photoshop collage. I used this collage to add motion to the word "potatoes" by resizing the image, adding a new layer, and moving the new layer onto the original image. This layer then became the new background. Q: PowerShell: Assign Variable to Desired Path from a List I have a script which has a parameter which specifies the folder where the list of files which are to be extracted are. $Folder = "D:\Scripts\Test" Get-ChildItem $Folder | select Name, LastWriteTime, Length, @{L={"Size";"Bytes";"MB/s"}} To run this script is something like this: .\myscript.ps1 -Folder "D:\Scripts\Test\FileName" How do I script this parameter to be something like $Folder = "D:\Scripts\Test" Get-ChildItem $Folder | select Name, LastWriteTime, Length, @{L={"Size";"Bytes";"MB/s"}} so that I can be able to run the script either like .\myscript.ps1 -Folder "D:\Scripts\Test\FileName" Or .\myscript.ps1 -Folder "D:\Scripts\Test\SomeOtherFolder\FileName" ? I guess this can be achieved by running some command line script and then passing it the path to the file which is passed in $Folder parameter. I was hoping to avoid the same but creating the entire script from the command line with "PowerShell.exe" is kind of too complicated. If there is no alternative to what I want to achieve, I will need to do that after all. A: If you want to re-run from script, I would just write a simple script or function to do it for you. You might also check out Invoke-Expression or Invoke-Cliand to run a script from your script. The rates of prevalence of hypertension, diabetes, and obesity in the central African Republic. Urinary tract infection due to extended-spectrum β-lactamase-producing enterobacteriaceae: Clinical course in an Italian intensive care unit. Infections due to extended-spectrum β-lactamase (ESBL)-producing enterobacteriaceae are associated with high morbidity and mortality, particularly in intensive care units (ICU). We conducted this study to describe the clinical characteristics of ESBL-producing infections in the ICU and to evaluate their impact on outcome. This is a retrospective observational cohort study involving adult patients admitted to the ICU at the University Campus Bio-Medico of Rome, Italy, between January 2007 and December 2016. ESBL-producing enterobacteriaceae were isolated from urine, tracheal secretions, wound secretions, or a combination of these. Clinical data, including all microbiological results, were extracted from the medical records. Out of 1119 ICU admissions, 169 cases of ESBL-producing enterobacteriaceae were diagnosed during hospitalization in the ICU. The median age was 70 years (interquartile range 58-78 years). The most common comorbidities were neurological disorders (73.5%), chronic kidney disease (29.7%), cardiovascular diseases (24.4%), and chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (21.0%). Patients with ESBL-producing enterobacteriaceae had a longer length of hospital stay than did patients with enterobacteriaceae without ESBL (19 days vs. 12 days; P A comparison of the echocardiographic morphology of the mitral valve in patients with cyanotic and acyanotic congenital heart disease.
