A: fileinfo is part of the PECL package pecl_fileinfo, available in the perl-devel package. By Dan Whitcomb CONCORD, N.H. (Reuters) - Democratic presidential hopeful Hillary Clinton on Monday declared that most voters "want to know that when they hear that your opponent got four times as much money from a Super PAC as you did, that it's true. That's what most people want to know." The comments, the latest in an ongoing string of Clinton critics about the influence of so-called Super PACs, a political action committee outside groups, on the 2016 presidential campaign, mark a shift in the former U.S. secretary of state's tone in an increasingly negative campaign against Republican nominee Donald Trump. While Trump's big-spending, super political attack-ad machine - such as the campaign's "birther" movement questioning her birthplace - has been blunted by his unwillingness to quit, the Clinton campaign, allied Super PACs and the press are increasingly unloading on Clinton's effectiveness and viability. As a former First Lady, U.S. senator and senator-turned-secretary of state, Clinton is more accustomed to taking a "one person one vote" approach to running for president rather than relying on Super PACs, which can cost close to $1 million for a single ad buy. But the big-spending campaign is the only one of six Democrats still campaigning for the nomination with enough money to compete in a crowded Republican field. While Clinton has tapped a long-serving campaign team, including campaign manager Robby Mook, for the presidential contest, her allies include super PACs in Priorities USA Action, Onward Together and Correct the Record, the former aides to President Barack Obama who are trying to help her get to the general election. When she launched her campaign earlier this year, Clinton told donors in San Francisco it was an "unusual" time for a woman to run for president. "I am running against a candidate who calls women 'pigs' and 'dogs' and 'disgusting animals,'" she said, referring to Trump's insulting comments about women that have sparked his poll numbers to rise. Story continues "He lies almost as much as he tweets," she said. "I want you to tell your mother, your sister, your daughter and your friends that you need them to vote. And
