to be in service, but it eats up the available memory of the computer. Despite the fact that many computers are still in use, the limited settings that help filter what appears on the screen and secure the computer in the event of an unauthorised use prevents the user from encountering any difficulties while switching off the service. The program is installed with the new ThinkPad systems that were released during the summer of 2012. It is enabled by default, and you won't find it in the list of applications. This is the reason that you don't have to uninstall it or even manually start the SafeGuard program. It is automatically list of options that appear when you click on the battery, and then click on the Power Down button that appears on the laptop's screen. Once activated, the SafeGuard system that is installed will start to run. The next time you turn the computer on, its High Security Setting will be turned on, which is the standard setting of the ThinkPad systems that are already in use. This issue is not a problem for you, and there is no need to do anything about it. The SafeGuard system is not the only software that IBM uses to improve the security level of the ThinkPad computers, and it is a good thing that it is put in place to assist users with identifying potential threats in advance. Every precaution is taken, and therefore you do not have to worry about getting to the point of switching off the SafeGuard service in your computer.
