When the men got into the bayou and met some people trying to get out, they joined the rescue effort, according to Smith. "They started going back to rescue folks," Smith said. "I don't know the extent of their injuries." David Aranda, a spokesman for the Harris County Fire Marshal's Office, said the men were assigned to go to the hospital for "medical check up and probably some mental health issues." Aranda did not comment on whether the men had suicidal intentions or were suicidal. Rick McGehee, President of Texas Task Force 1, told NBC News on Friday that as the men were taking an injured woman to a hospital, they did not know that their boat was leaking water. "They had no idea," he said. The incident happened about 7 a.m. on Thursday when their boat got stuck in floodwaters near Mission Bend and King's Island and the men couldn't make it back. "We had no food, no water, no radio and were hoping for help," said McGehee, who has been volunteering for 16 years. "It was a crazy situation." The men were rescued by other crews after they went missing
