Human iPS cells display neurogenesis and pluripotency in vitro and in vivo. Human induced pluripotent stem cells (hiPSCs) derived from a patient with a genetic form of amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (ALS) carrying a SOD1 G93A mutation were successfully reprogrammed and characterized. These hiPSCs, both in monolayer culture and in three-dimensional (3D) aggregates, exhibit two distinct properties: 1) an undifferentiated, homogenous expression of pluripotency markers and 2) a high incidence of neural differentiation. Here, we demonstrate that, upon withdrawal of the reprogramming factors, they become capable of differentiating along the ectoderm and mesoderm germ layers. Our data also show that, upon transplantation into a mouse model of Parkinson disease, they successfully engraft and colonize the entire nigral region of the brain, as well as engraft striatal regions and some hypothalamic nuclei. We also show that, upon differentiation along the neural lineage, the transplanted hiPSCs express mature neuronal markers and form neurons expressing the post-mitotic neuronal phenotype. Finally, in a primate model of ALS, we show that the transplant of these hiPSCs, but not of control undifferentiated or differentiated hiPSCs, has the potential to slow down motor neuron degeneration. Thus, the reprogramming and characterization of ALS-hiPSCs brings to the fore the challenges associated with the future clinical use of these cells.

Q: Why is a question marked for deletion when there is an accepted answer? I just came across a question that was marked for deletion because it has an accepted answer. This invention relates to a drive system for a bicycle, and more particularly to a drive system for a bicycle having a chain-drive for driving a rear wheel and having a sprocket-drive for driving a front chainwheel and a sprocket which are arranged one upon the other for cooperation with a chain for driving the rear wheel. Generally, a bicycle having a chain-drive for driving a rear wheel and having a sprocket-drive for driving a front chainwheel and a sprocket which are arranged one upon the other for cooperation with a chain for driving the rear wheel is provided with a drive-derailleur for linking the chain and sprocket with a crank shaft of a drive mechanism and a cam mechanism for shifting the drive-derailleur in accordance with the difference of the number of the sprockets and the chain. In recent years, a compact and light-weight drive mechanism has been required in the drive system for the bicycle, and there is a tendency of arranging a sprocket and chain wheel as small as possible. In view of this, in a system disclosed in Japanese Patent Publication No. 48-15996, a sprocket is arranged in the inside of a bicycle frame and a chain wheel is arranged on the outside. When a chain wheel having a small number of sprockets is used, the chain tends to be bent in the region of the chain wheel. Therefore
