What's new:

~ I've been feeling downright invincible lately. I've had this wonderful indescribable sense of worthiness. There are lots of days when I don't feel entirely ready for the world, but even during those times I've always felt above serving the group to which I belong and still most reject. It didn't matter. I've been strong—strong enough. As if this disease wasn't going to break me. But even on those days, I acknowledge that I'm failing you. That my body is not a monument of strenuousness to stand as a memorial to those who flourished before me. And I feel so guilty. And yet, I'm so healthy. I'm so blessed. I'm so alive. And you? What about you? Have you been feeling indestructible? I hope I didn't put you on the spot. You're not the only one who thinks she needs other people's acknowledgment. It seems like I'm supposed to feel strong on my own. But for real. That's the beauty of grief. It isn't something you can live in abeyance. Even if I don't talk about it all the time, I'm thinking about our family. About what you must be going through. About life without us. About how I'm failing to provide the things you need. And even though I don't write or even speak about grief often, I can't escape knowing that you're in it. I can't escape knowing that my body, which seemed resistant and unyielding, is actually the very instrument through which we keep your memory alive. And I know I have to keep it alive. On the cusp of a new year and even though I'm not entirely sure what to expect, I know the difference between being strong and being strong enough. Last year I forgot something big, something that goes hand in hand with treatment: caffeine. I spent the entire year with all the people in this community trying to keep my head above water and it was mostly a healthy awakening and reawakening of my

Survive the world of The Bayonet in this arena-based third person action survival game. When a global pandemic hits, the government has seen fit to have the majority of the population sent to remote bunkers to save us from the infected. Unfortunately, not all of these bunkers are safe. Powered by Unreal Engine, Bayonet puts you in the shoes of a scavenger on a mission to stay alive in a vast online wasteland. What to expect from the game: 3-dimensional graphics, intuitive controls, realistic physics and an immersive survival experience, Bayonet incorporates all the atmosphere that makes Tomb Raider a legendary series. The gameplay revolves around melee, ranged weapons and ammo management. You'll need to be creative and know when to just blast your enemy to pieces. Use your grenades to get out of sticky situations or just to throw yourself out of danger. Choose between melee combat and ranged weapons, change your load-outs, disable grenades in order to use them as a last resort. The better a weapon you have, the more ammo you will have. Use the gun on the left and the plasma pistol on the right to take your enemies down. The best way to survive is to be unpredictable. If you're quick, use the rocket launcher to blow them up, or melee if they are closer. As with any survival game, the world in which you play has a deep story. As you play, the story unfolds slowly as you figure out what the events leading to the pandemic really was. Your weapon will be your main tool in survival as it is upgraded. Upgrade the gun, the grenade, the melee and the ranged weapons to take your enemies down. Weather will come into play as you play, rain can be detrimental to your vision, and lightning is just your standard electrical storm. Use lightning if you need to find survivors, use the rain as your best friend to avoid detection or use the storm to pick-off your enemies. Survival is not without its challenges. The infected aren't your only opponents. Be on the lookout for other survivors, also known as Raiders. Hold them at bay as they will try to take down your character to get some supplies. Designing your own shelter is crucial. The shelter makes sure you don't get caught in the rain. The shelter also helps protect you from viruses in the environment. It's not your only shield; watch out for flying debris that can wipe you out, or debris that can knock you out of your shelter.
