Q: Standardize time format given time I'm working with Access SQL to output a table of log data. I am using the format "# mm/dd/yyyy hh:mm" for date fields, while using "mm-dd-yyyy" for time. Is there a more standardized way to format time fields? (eg, "mm-dd-yyyy hh:mm a")

A: Access doesn't seem to have support for applying "business" time formatting to date/time fields in any "standard" way; I've ran into this difficulty several times. However, you may be able to solve this yourself by using the DateSerial() and Date() functions together to format the time column as follows: Month(DateSerial(Year(Date()), Month(Date()), Day(Date())))

I've tested this and found it solves the problem without letting users or/and queries think your data is formatted in non-standard ways.

I've been working on this game for about 3 and a half years now, and I wanted to share it with everyone. Mentioned in GameInformer Magazine. "As a first-person combat game, Masked Vale's subject matter is reminiscent of classic, 8-bit fare such as Gadius or Mega Man. The perspective is physical and combat is fast and frantic. Although not much is conveyed about the game's backstory, the character design and level design for each section of the map is unique and well thought out." - Nathan M.
