Rage Therapy: Platforming meets Auto Pilot. You can set the visual filters, and a fly through will get you there, then it's all up to you - to find the right balance of attack, defense, and precise jumps for each individual level in a hilarious tutorial style animation environment. And then you're off, racing against the clock, killing enemies and trying to get through every ultra challenging level to the last. The Platforming: RTAG rise features both classic 2D platforming, but as well as 3D. Controls are responsive and fluid. in the main levels, every level has been crafted to offer you the necessary checkpoints and shortcuts for the fastest game completion times. We balanced the gameplay difficulty for casual to hard and the other way round - from the very beginning, never has it been created with the purpose to raise the difficulty of the game. About The Developer RTAG rise is a experience driven game. One of the very first things we did when we created the game was working on an ambitious story driven narrative. The story is driven by flashbacks, layers of backstory, plot twists and a multitude of characters. We decided from the beginning that the game would not follow any traditional story path of its kind. Even after that decision was made we still met with many issues - for a story driven game, the engine we chose to use for the game is hardly suitable to create such a complex narrative. So instead of creating a traditional cinematic style, we decided to let the story flow with the gameplay itself in our gameplay videos. And we think it has worked out - the gameplay itself, in itself, is amazing enough to create such a unique and cool story driven experience. The story: RTAG rise makes you live the story from the viewpoint of Ray, as a young researcher who has spent his life up until now in the laboratories working on futuristic technology. The story is about his first experiences after the world he knew was suddenly collapsing, brought by the desert and on the way, he comes across some mysterious medical equipment, and becomes a human guinea pig, trying out the newest and most complex treatments. At some point during his research he finds himself in the middle of the story of the game, and sets off to gather the survivors of this mysterious desert facility where they are trying to escape to. Without any memory of how he got to the city, he starts to figure out who he is and what happened. He is then set off on an unexpected journey to a whole other dimension.Where:

"In Shadow Heroes, a single team plays against the computer AI or other human players in a unique battle format. The battles can be played in single or multiplayer mode on local network or Internet, and can be played in campaign or skirmish mode. Regardless of the mode, players can attack by controlling a team of heroes or by using and upgrading key items. Shadow Heroes takes the power from heroes and puts it into battle. Heroes like the Minotaur, Streak and Vamp are back for the "Savage Dawn", and they have been re-worked with new attacks and items. The Siegfried Axe is now a powerful weapon that can be upgraded to a spinning crossbow. These are just a few of the new additions to the game. Campaign mode allows players to create their own team of 15 heroes, with plans, items, and powers. Players can also unlock new heroes and items as they progress. When playing a Multiplayer or Online skirmish, you will play as one of twelve heroes, with battle tactics and an ability to choose which items and heroes to start with. There are no resource gathering and no base building in Shadows of War, so players can focus on the power of their army and the abilities of their heroes. The game also allows players to lead an army of 20 units, complete with plans, items, and abilities. Shadow Heroes lets you create your own army with plans, items, and abilities to gain victory. Customize your heroes to suit your style of play. Play against players or the AI to get more practice in your chosen style. Take your handpicked heroes into the battlefield and use your special skills to defeat your enemy. NEW! Battle for control of the map and defeat the opponent. Defend your base and attack the enemy. Defend and attack simultaneously! Two computer players or four human players (up to eight computers) can play at once. The battles between you and the computer are an intense test of your abilities. Each round will last only 30 seconds and will end with the victory or defeat of one of your units. If the losing unit has any abilities left, the computer AI will have to spend the next battle running around trying to regain them. NEW! As you progress through the campaign, you will be able to unlock new heroes, items, and abilities for your army. With Shadow Heroes, you can create, protect, and destroy. - Customize your units with Plans, Items, and Abilities. - c9d1549cdd

In my application I want to show 2 days after the entry date, instead of showing the entry date. I'm using the following code to show it: $date_1 = date("d-m-Y", strtotime($row['entrydate'])); $date_2 = date("d-m-Y", strtotime($row['entrydate']. 2)); But it is showing the current date. I need $date_1 to be 2 days after the entrydate and $date_2 to be 4 days after the entrydate. A: You need to pass the two dates to the constructor of DateTime. For example, if today is January 30th, 2012, to check if there will be a two-day difference 1. Create two DateTime instances, one for checking "today" and another for checking "two days ago" $today = new DateTime('now'); $yesterday = clone $today; $yesterday->modify('-2 days'); 2. Calculate the difference between the two

What's new in Fantasy Grounds - 5E: Fifth Edition Feats:

My apologies for the delay in releasing this preliminary post. Things have been a little behind the scenes with the new projects now underway. Today I have an update from my friend, Andrew. He has been on top of the Demo release, cracking into the malware through their infected version of Metawebsite. Here's a look back. Here's a very preliminary flowchart that I hope will be something to work from as we go forward. One thing I've learned is that the malware is very dynamic. It's extremely difficult to guess which particular steps are going to happen on what time. I'm not going to go into a lot of detail. At the end of this post you'll get a sense of just where the flow begins. Here's a thumbnail of the malware… Figure 1: "Demo" Picture of the malware flow chart taken from a Google search result. Image created on May 6th 2011. So, back to Andrew. He got a heads up about this malware yesterday and the first thing he did was to check his metaview logs to see what had been going on recently. Table 1: Summary of activity in the metaview.com database from 2/20/2011 – 3/9/2011. Figure 2: Flow chart of traffic picked up in the metaview logs. The key driver here is that while the traffic pattern was stealing data, there was a cluster that believed it had successfully compromised the site. Figure 2 shows the data being taken back to the server in Italy. The next step was to look at the SQL dump, to see if the site had been taken over. Figure 3: Flowchart of traffic extracted by using SQL statements to capture the data from the site. Surprisingly there was nothing in the SQL dump, meaning that the attacker believed he was successful in infecting the site, but had not planned on pulling off anything. This same event occurred on a further 2 websites belonging to the same person/company, and the three were no doubt trying to piggy-back off one another. Having looked at the sites, Andrew was able to determine that the Metawebsite.com flow chart was the same for all 3 sites, meaning that we knew it hadn't been done from scratch. This meant it had to have come from a previous infection.
