Navi Pillay said Friday that her office was informed that the Ukrainian authorities had issued a complaint to the UN. The complaint was not made public. Ukrainian authorities last month said Volodymyr Tsybulko, a correspondent for the Ukrainian weekly newspaper Vesti, was abducted by a pro-Russian militia in the eastern city of Slovyansk. Interfax news agency reported that Tsybulko has been charged with espionage. He has been accused of spying for Ukraine's main intelligence service and was seen by some as having exposed information on the activities of a pro-Russian group behind a deadly attack on a protest camp last month. Pillay said she is "looking forward" to receiving information from Ukraine about the journalist's disappearance and "will look into the case to the extent that she can." The United Nations chief said she has been requesting that the Syrian government grant her access to the case, noting that "access to a detainee is a right that may have serious consequences" on the prisoner's well-being. But she also noted that the Syrian government would have to agree to her request. Militias from the former Soviet republic of Ukraine are fighting government forces in the east of the country. At least three journalists have been killed in the conflict and more than 50 have been abducted. Snowden, whose US espionage activities were disclosed by former National Security Agency contractor Edward Snowden, began a six-day trip to Iceland on Tuesday as he seeks asylum there from the United States. A person familiar with the plans said the 32-year-old former American computer programmer also plans to seek political asylum in Switzerland. Snowden -
