Note For Mac, check out our photo retouching book, _Digital Photo Retouching For Dummies_, to find out more about using Photoshop on a Mac. The toolbars on the left side of the screen provide a large number of functions for creating and modifying your image. You can view these functions on the workspace — which is the computer screen on which you start and make your edits. Figure 1-2 shows a basic View window displaying the top and side ruler lines. The top ruler line controls the physical size of your image, and the left and right sides of the screen provide you with two rows of ruler lines. Most of the rulers can be hidden or shown by clicking the line at the edge of the rulers. To make more room on the screen, simply drag a ruler to the edge. To hide a ruler, press the Shift key and click one of the ruler lines. * If you're using a VGA monitor, you should see a line in the middle of the computer screen called the _screen or workspace zoom line_ (see the left image in Figure 1-2). Dragging it (while holding down the Ctrl key) shows or hides the rulers, and clicking it displays the rulers and returns the entire workspace to 1:1 size. Figure 1-2. The View window provides a full-screen canvas for all your image editing. Here the screen ruler at the top is the physical size of the image; the left and right rulers provide you with two rows of ruler lines; and the lines along the bottom show the active layers in the active layer group.

If you want to get the top features like Curves, Smart Sharpen and much more, you need to go for Photoshop. However, if you just want to make some small changes to your images or do some retouching, Photoshop Elements is the answer. Photoshop Elements features a minimalistic interface. All of the tools are grouped together into tabs. In the Tools tab you will find the basic image editing tools. You can do a lot with them, but none of them is as powerful or as dedicated as the features found in Photoshop. You may notice that the Photoshop-like brushes and gradients are missing in Elements. You can use a special "pencil tool" (which looks exactly like a brush) for all these purposes. The Adjust tab contains the advanced tools for image correction and adjustment. There is no way to make a perfect image by adjusting only a few settings. You have to apply multiple adjustments. The Adjustments categories are found in the Adjust tab. You can manage all the adjustments in Image → Adjustments → Levels or Image → Adjustments → Curves or Image → Adjustments → Layers. The Adjustments categories are found in the Adjust tab. Separation of co-polymers by biosurfactant addition and characterization of rheological properties. The separation of by-product polymers from polymer blends is very important and should be applicable for other industries also. In the present study, the use of biosurfactant produced by Klebsiella pneumoniae was explored for separating co-polymers. Based on the hydrophobicity of the co-polymers, a reasonable mixture was determined. Biosurfactant was used to separate the co-polymers from a mixture of the two polymers. A combination of co-polymers was prepared with the ratio of 50% of one and 50% of the other. Biosurfactant was added to the mixture at various ratios. Rheological properties of the mixtures were measured using a rotational viscometer to determine the optimum ratio of biosurfactant in the mixture. The results showed that the viscosity of the mixture decreased as the biosurfactant concentration increased. By reducing the viscosity of the co-polymer mixture, it is possible to separate the two components easily. The separation efficiencies of the mixture with and without biosurfactant were found to be 99.97 and 94.9%, respectively.We're using cookies. We use them to give you the best experience. Nephrotoxicity The risk of nephrotoxicity is particularly high when amino acids are used as a part of the hematopoietic support with DAPS. The risk is dose-dependent and presents a great variability in the literature, ranging from 7 to 50%. A 90-day treatment with DAPS containing amino acid solution is associated with a nephrotoxicity incidence rate of 7% when the dose is 120 mg/kg. For patients receiving lower doses, the risk is lower, but still high, ranging from 0 to 15%. Even with multiple drug therapy, the nephrotoxicity rate is usually low, remaining between 5 and 10%, and even lower with regimens consisting of DAPS alone ([@b39-mco-0-0-1596]). In fact, in most of the studies, the total of the side effects is lower for patients in the DAPS group, which is probably due to a lower dose, with the later in relationship to the
