Upanishad sources The Indian epics puranic books have four major divisions: epics, sautas, anukramanas and vedanga vyakaranas. The content of all these is of the sruti, the original source of their Sanskrit expressions, meaning that the written form is not identical with the spoken, but comes down from it as an idealized reconstruction. This reconstruction process of the original may be in the terms of just one speaker or may be in the terms of many speakers, depending on the original. The same original has been handed down, in case of a single speaker, as the spoken form, and, in case of multiple speakers, as the written form. The written form is a reconstruction that reflects all the (oral) utterances of the original, taken together. The resulting written form is called the sanskrit.
