The formation of molecular layers in a defined manner or of homogeneous molecular layers on substrates is an object of great interest in the semiconductor industry. For the production of semiconductor chips and other electronic components, epitaxy is usually employed as a process for the production of monocrystalline and/or polycrystalline layer formation. Epitaxy may be subdivided into a number of different categories, such as chemical vapor-phase epitaxy (CVPE), molecular beam epitaxy (MBE), liquid phase epitaxy (LPE), and physical vapor-phase epitaxy (PVPE).
