Mother Saga :A word from Alice “After the baby is born, it can die and they bring it into the real world. Imagine a scenario where a child was driven to New York, to have a baby. As soon as the baby's born, the child can be sent back. Or they might think they are delivering a baby but the newborn person doesn't function.” -Alice or anyone reading this has already had this happen to them in their life or they are close to it. “We've had situations where surrogates have given us blue babies. It usually took a week or two for the baby to become a real baby. Then we had to have them in the hospital.” -This is so damn sick! The Surrogate Mother Saga this week; learn to cherish those fucking blue babies. Comments truth.blood.beauty 10085. There is no contesting the fact that, starting at birth, fetuses, twins, and triplets have a pretty similar appearance, particularly given the lack of any artificial contouring. No one has altered a fetus' appearance in an effort to be “different.” One is naturally born. We control how we look by wearing makeup or altering hair, getting plastic surgery, etc. 1. Stuck in a no-walk way. 2. Ask a child this question. See if they have ever been in this position before. They might not know they are in trouble before it is too late. Love and puppies and nightmares and clawing, baby, then fear and then, once the childhood cycle ends, drifting to the place that one is now. A place that is waiting for the next person to get lucky, or unlucky, because who wants to move on? Start talking to the baby. Baby: “I don't know where I am.” Me: “I'm going to take you home right now so you can be safe.” Child: “I DON'T WANT TO GO HOME!” (Sadly, this is reality.) Me: *Pick up baby, push, and we walk outside and lay the baby down in front of the heater. It will keep you warm. Child: “OH MY GOD!” (Surprised, relieved.) Me: “It's going to be ok, baby.

Adoptive immunotherapy of squamous cell carcinoma of the head and neck. A variety of immunotherapeutic approaches have been used to treat metastatic squamous cell carcinoma of the head and neck (SCCHN). Although the majority of phase I-II trials have demonstrated significant anti-tumor activity with a combination of cytokines and antibodies, the majority of randomized phase III studies have demonstrated no differences in response rates or survival when compared with combination chemotherapy. The lack of survival differences suggests that, although single-agent immunotherapy may be useful in certain subsets of patients, immunotherapy used alone is unlikely to prove successful in the majority of patients. For this reason, new strategies designed to augment the host immune response to tumors are being explored. Both interferon-alpha and interleukin-2 have the ability to induce an anti-tumor activity in SCCHN. Numerous strategies are being evaluated to optimize the delivery of these cytokines, augment the immune response by activation of accessory cells, and combine the two modalities to create an additive or synergistic effect. The early results of these attempts at immunotherapy are encouraging, and perhaps when associated with other cancer-specific therapies, they will result in a significant improvement in response rates and survival for patients with head and neck cancers.
