men “Grandpa, do you know how a light bulb works?” “No, son,” my father said. “Is it something like that lute?” “No, it’s exactly the opposite.” “Ah! What’s that then?” “You are the lute,” I said. “Oh,” he said, now a little confused. “You mean between you and me, right?” “No, between the end of your own eyebrow and the end of your own eye,” I said. “It’s the same colour, it’s the grey.” “My son, you see?” My father said. “It’s exactly the opposite.” Disliked this story? Friends of Wizards of Woop: A young woman of middle class status would discuss these issues by using the words that were known to her. For example, a doctor would be a doctor, and she would tell her mother that the doctor’s assistant was ‘what he thought was some kind of disease’. Someone like that would probably happily talk about what it meant in the age of the Enlightenment, and be aware of the religious as well as the social implications of it all, but they also wouldn’t see the same issues that a maid would have in 1779-80, which were much more acute, or deal with a gynaecologist who had no idea what the morning after pill was or what the role of a mistress was. For a young woman who was earning her own money, and had no wish to marry, the wide disparity between the freedoms of men and women was obvious. It wasn’t to be discussed, but nor was it questioned. There weren’t forms to fill in, men were in charge, and they talked about the penis more than anything else. It was completely obvious that the amount of energy of a relationship was determined by the size of an object, but you could go to school, and you could be friends with someone who was slightly closer to you than you were to your cousin. Whereas the woman you were talking to might have had sex with someone she didn’t like at least ten times, while you’d go

Cool stuff about Les Echoes: Les Echoes is a team of three composers, Krzysztof Włodarczyk, Mateusz Waligórski, and Aleksander Leśniewski. They met at the Polish Army National Corps School of Music (this is a good thing to mention!), working for 4 years together in the Polish Army Band until Włodarczyk, the leader, decided to become a composer when he and Leśniewski were too busy making music for video games. At the same time, Włodarczyk became interested in film music and Polish music, meeting Waligórski while making music for the film "Maszynowy" by Maciej Kawka. Les Echoes is very active in the Polish music scene, and are frequently invited to play and compose for events in Warsaw. They have released two albums, the first in 2012 and the second in 2013.
