Games via Ncsoft Radio.Q: Dynamically loading a DOM-element creates two identical DOM-elements I have trouble with loading a custom-made element in a custom template (created with JSP, included in index.jsp). The template contains both a element, (included from index.jsp), and a element (made of a few JavaScript-functions and DIV-elements). The custom-made element should be loaded just for one user, and thus a different URL for that user is required. If it's not loaded the first time, a script will load it again. I followed this article, to create a custom-made element in a separate JSP-page: When I include the JSP-page, I make sure to modify the -tag using one of the div-properties. The problem is, that the second time the script runs (when the user is already logged in), two of the same custom-made elements will be loaded instead of just one, and I see the first custom-made element created twice. Is there a solution to this? My custom-made element looks like this:

```
$(document).ready(function() { if (loggedIn()) {
$('#customclass').customElement().load(); } else {
```
