Unfortunately, the support does not extend to Windows 10 Mobile.Q: Replace entire string with another string but in different cases, not vice versa The goal is to replace the entire content of a file with another string, but in the right cases as well. If a file contains 'Hello' somewhere in it, then it should be replaced with 'Good bye'. But if it contains 'Good bye' it should not be replaced. I have found the following snippets for replacing the entire content of a file: (Sorry for my bad english :P) System.IO.File.Replace(fileName, replacementString, new String() { true, false }, StringComparison.CurrentCultureIgnoreCase); System.IO.File.Replace(fileName, replacementString, new String() { true, true }, StringComparison.CurrentCultureIgnoreCase); System.IO.File.Replace(fileName, replacementString, StringComparison.CurrentCultureIgnoreCase); But none of these methods replace the whole string, but only the portion that was matched by the regular expression. In other words: The first method replaces only the part 'Hello' and not the string 'Good bye'. The second method replaces the whole string 'Good bye' but without replacing the string 'Hello' at the end. Do I have to implement my own regex for this or are there better alternatives? A: You can match your entire string and replace it within a string: var original = "Hello! Good bye."; var newText = $"{Regex.Replace(original, "Good bye", "goodBye")} Good bye!"; Aircraft, such as helicopters, include many electronic devices, such as, for example, sensors, communications equipment, navigation and/or other instruments, and so on. These devices are typically powered by electrical power, which is supplied by
