Q: Polymorphic Linq Conditionals

Imagine an object with a field that is an enum. In case of a switch or if there are multiple conditions, I'd like to put this:

var car = GetCar(carId); string name =
car.Engine == Engine.None?

defaultName : car.Engine.Name; Which then results in this: var car =
```

```
GetCar(carId); string name = (car.Engine
== Engine.None? defaultName :

car.Engine.Name)?? string.Empty; Which at the moment doesn't compile, which is fine. But I want to know how I can do this in a nice way. If I have 3 cases, is there some kind of nice way to put this together? Edit 1: The reason I need this is because I have an object that has an ID, and then this object has various other properties. Some of these other properties are related to a few different enum types, and I do want to check on which one has this property set. Edit 2: I actually switched to a dictionary. `var car = new Dictionary(); car.Add(Engine.None, defaultName); car.Add(Engine.V6, "V6"); car.Add(Engine.V8, "V8"); var carD = new CarDto(car); // And then, since I already have a reference to the dictionary, I can now just do string name = carD.GetCarEngine(carId).Name; A:`

Simplify with dictionary: `var car = GetCar(carId); string name = car.Engine == Engine.None ? defaultName :`

`car.Engine.Name ?? string.Empty;`
Alternatively, you can also use a Dictionary and then just: `string name = car.Engine.Key == Engine.None ? defaultName : car.Engine.Value;` This last version is less readable, but if you want performance you might also do it the following way: `var keys = car.Engine.AllKeys`
