"Dread Delusion" is a song by English producer and

DJ Errol, featuring vocals from singer-songwriter Sophie Ellis-Bextor and billed as "the Official New Anthem in Support of Equality". The single was released in the United Kingdom by Orange Tree Records on 27 August 2015 as Errol's debut single. The song was written by Errol and Ellis-Bextor specifically for the song, while production was credited to Ellis-Bextor's Twisted Nerve partner and fellow British producer and DJ Cutfather. The song is a combination of dance and pop music with heavy use of synthesiser and the Roland GR-50 Drum Trigger Guitar - a guitar sequencer, synthesizer and drum-machine. Produced in London at Playback Recording Studios, the song also features the Roland GR-50 guitar and Roland Vision Junior synth. The song's duration is 4 minutes and 9 seconds, and its instrumentation is largely based on the Roland GR-50 Drum Trigger Guitar and Roland Science Bass-Synth 2. According to Ellis-Bextor, the song was the first time that she and Errol worked together. "Dread Delusion" peaked on number 23 on the UK Singles Chart after spending eleven weeks on the chart, and also topped the UK Dance Chart. It has since been heralded as an LGBT anthem. The song was also noted for simultaneously becoming the new anthem with OneRepublic's "Give Me Love", a song from their album Native, released five months before, and crossing over to the pop charts with the addition of an American version. Following the announcement of her headlining debut Lollapalooza 2015 tour dates in the United States, Ellis-Bextor performed

"Dread Delusion" received positive reviews from music critics, who complimented the song's production and listeners' response to the song, and Ellis-Bextor and Errol's vocals. Several music writers also compared the song to Errol's previous work as an electronica producer. Although the original mix was not released as a single or on an EP, it was made available a year later on Ellis-Bextor's debut album called Two and on Errol's breakout solo project Sambass under his alias L1NCH. Effect of a dietary lipid emulsion on recovery of cardiopulmonary function after induced hemorrhagic shock in dogs. The effect of a dietary lipid emulsion (50 ml/kg of body weight/day) was evaluated in dogs after induced hemorrhagic shock. Hemorrhage (30% of the estimated blood volume, EBL) was followed by a resuscitation period (t = 1 hr) with whole blood (15 ml/kg/min). During this period, one of the following treatments were given: 10 ml/kg/min of plasma-containing lipid emulsion (LIPE group), 50 ml/kg/day of lipid emulsion (LIPE group), or saline (SAL group). A second period of resuscitation (t = 2 hr) was similar to the first but in which saline was substituted for the lipid emulsion. Mortality was not significantly different among the
