Google Play announced Thursday that it is removing Instadebit, a popular mobile wallet that lets Brazilians buy apps and in-app items, from the Google Play Store due to "change in the business model." "We've worked with Instadebit for several years, and they've been a solid partner in providing a reliable business platform for independent developers," said Google in a blog post, "but they recently changed their business model to include payment to Google or other payment services such as VISA or MasterCard. That violates our policies against payments for clicks and for charging consumers for a Google Play Subscription service."
