Learn more at * * * ## Processing Images in Python Processing is a language that enables you to import images and manipulate them in many ways (covered in greater detail in the Processing documentation at). It is similar to some aspects of Python, and its programs can be executed in Python. To create an image in Processing, start by importing a library of image-manipulating functions, such as `image` from the `processing` package. To read an image file into memory, you can use `image.load(mypic.png)`: from processing import image, color img = image.load("./images/oak.png")
