Neovascular age-related macular degeneration (NVAMD) is an important cause of visual impairment in elderly people. To evaluate the efficacy of intravitreal bevacizumab in the treatment of NVAMD. PATIENTS AND METHODS. Twenty-seven patients with NVAMD were treated with intravitreal bevacizumab. Visual acuity (VA), optical coherence tomography (OCT) and fundus examination were performed at baseline and monthly for 6 months. The baseline and follow-up OCT scans were evaluated for the presence of intravetinal cysts, subretinal fluid and/or serous pigment epithelial detachment (PED). The treatment was considered effective if retinal or subretinal fluid was not detected, or if fluid only was present. Visual acuity improved or remained stable in all cases, while OCT demonstrated complete resolution of fluid in 23/27 eyes (86.9%) or reduction in size of the PED in 18/27 (66.6%). Only one eye demonstrated a worsening of retinal exudates. The mean duration of effective treatment was 3 months (1-9 months). Bevacizumab is an efficient and well-tolerated treatment for NVAMD, offening substantial improvements in VA, OCT and fundus examination. The activity of electron-transfer flavoprotein dehydrogenase (ETF-DH) was determined by NADH oxidation with the use of an artificial electron acceptor (Rubpy-XZ-Al) at 6 degrees C in the presence of the inhibitor, dicumarol. The method is more sensitive and is not affected by high concentrations of dicumarol. With this method, enzymatic activity in rat liver mitochondria was found to be 1.3 units per mg protein, which was close to the results obtained in the present method (1.0 units per mg protein) and in our previous method (1.4) units per mg protein). This assay system has the advantages of being sensitive
