We spend money that could be going to necessities, don't take care of our homes, and generally waste our days. It's time to get your shiz together and get your head in the game. Here are some activities that not only keep your brain active but also increase the volume of grey matter. Read There's so much great content out there. If you're like most people, you can get caught up in so many things that your brain feels like it's on overload. Reading can give you the mental break you need and allow you to switch to a different brain state. But whatever you're reading, be careful. Reading on your phone is killing our eyes. In fact, I suggest reading on your laptop with the light on (you'll definitely see a difference). Read a new book or magazine every week. Once you're over the hump of procrastination, you'll have enough guilt for you to stick to it. Write Writing is hard. Most people would rather spend their time doing anything than sitting down and putting their thoughts down on paper. I get it. I think most people do. But think about it: is it really hard to take a few minutes to turn your thoughts into words? Not really. It's just habit. Do the Work If you have a habit of sitting around being lazy, then think about making a change. Take the time to get some work done. Do
