SEATTLE -- An idea that has been floating around for about a decade and a half has found its way into Seattle's 2015 budget. Local entrepreneur Nathan Proctor says the plan will create a dedicated employee to serve as a point person to tackle the issues like homelessness, housing and improving services and programs in the city. It will also allow the city to collect more revenue in neighborhoods in need. "It's funny because I'm sure there's someone out there who already did this, and if you look at your local agency budget that's my cost for the year. So there's probably a lot of people going around doing this already. But I'm the only one that believes in it 100 percent," said Proctor. "An employee of the city who would be in charge of homelessness wouldn't be in charge of a case, he would be responsible for the entire homeless situation. This person would also serve as the liaison between the city of Seattle and its various departments to help solve the issue of homelessness," said Proctor. Proctor says this change would be in addition to the 22 full-time jobs on his staff. To be known as the Director of Homelessness, the person would be the senior homeless czar who would be responsible for coordinating all of the pieces to get people off the streets. And he has a lot of work ahead of him. "I'm assuming I'm going to have to hire 1,000 people, but the homeless have an unemployment rate that's twice as high as the general population. So not only do we 6d1f23a050
