This is a SharePoint 2010 on-premises farm. The reason this is being done is because there is a requirement for the user to have a single sign on option. I have run into some issues getting this to work. These are the facts: User already exists in the AD User already exists in the local DB using Windows authentication User is being added to a SharePoint group in the web application User already exists in the web application DB using Windows authentication User being added to the group can see the SharePoint site, web application and the database What is NOT working: User cannot authenticate using the web application (Windows authentication) User cannot authenticate using the SharePoint group (domain account) Configurations: The domain accounts are added to the local DB (machine accounts) A group with the same name has been created in the web application What I have tried: Removed the web application (as I cannot make Windows authentication work) Added the domain user directly to the web application (using the SharePoint group) Updated the credentials for the web application on-premises Ran IISReset A: I resolved this myself. The two things I did which got me thinking about this resolved this issue: As I said in my question, the user was being added to a group in the web application As I said, the Windows authentication was not being used What I am guessing was happening is the Windows authentication is configured for the database authentication. This is my first time working on SharePoint on-premises. So looking at the custom mapping, I saw that all the users were created by the SQL server and one user was created by the ASP.NET machine account. That is where my thinking failed, but I thought that the SQL account was being used. I thought that the database was using Windows authentication, so as long as this account was 6d1f23a050
