indeed, victory was not worth having. as sherman said, i loathe to complain, but i am not sure but what, if i had been defeated, it would have been better for the whole country. the insurrection would not then have been crushed, but i do not suppose that the present rebellion would have had an existence. aside from the scourging of the rebellious, not so long ago, and other sporadic occurrence of a similar kind, we have enjoyed universal peace for several years. we have now peace as far as there is hope of it. had i been defeated, we would have had a civil war, and i think that the war itself would have been very different. the country would not have recovered from it as she has now recovered.6 the starvation of the country began, and consequently the outrages of marauding and plundering were inevitable. and, as general meigs put it, the people have not learned that we have no more animosity towards them than they have against us. the effect of this peace has been to bring out into the light of day our worst attributes; to show the world our true nature, our selfish ambition and greed. instead of building up a people, we have built up bazaars. instead of promoting commerce and industry, we have taught the people to trample on their obligations and to despise their rights as citizens. corruption has made them slaves to the very men who profess to govern them. we have greed, avarice and prodigality. we have ambition, and have set up sordid ambition for the place of the greatest of all virtues, to wit, the soul-saving love of god. nothing but war is now left in us.

the goal of sherman s mission had been to shatter the confederacy s will to resist, to cause the breakup of the army of the confederacy, and to force the army of northern virginia into the extermination fight that had to be fought before the civil war could be effectively won. to be sure, it is also true that if he had been defeated, the confederacy would have surely gone the way of all empires past and present, including the roman and holy roman empires that preceded it. but the lessons of history, including his own experience, show sherman that a nation can not be destroyed by a general, even if that general s impact is nearly absolute. certainly the north learned in 1864 that sherman deserved to be given the respect due a successful commander. 97. the new awareness of the rights of life will soon acquire the power to lead a people towards a greater appreciation of the dignity of the human person and, in the concrete, of the sacredness of life in its motherly dimension. 126 new humanity – the social, political, economic and environmental human being – must gradually be transformed in the eyes of people and in the eyes of the world into an ethical person endowed with a sense of responsibility for, and care of, his fellow human beings. 98. how can this new awareness of the dignity of life arise? it can only arise from a profound interiorisation of the gospel. the more we read, think and pray about it, the more the light of faith will dispel the darkness of everyday life. as a result, conscience will exercise its own freedom in a new way and will be able to organise more effectively the inner motivations, which sustain it in its decision-making and in its concrete acts. 5ec8ef588b
