

first, its not a media. instead of watching lectures of a pbl group discussing a research paper, youre watching a group of actual pbl groups discussing a paper. where they have their inaccuracies and problems in speaking, sketchy video are by and large more accurate. they have the increased benefit of the lecturer appearing in the video to really drive home the points he is making, which turns out to be a big factor in making everything stick in your memory. i think that the more accurate picmonic videos are especially important because every other study aid that i have used has been

drastically less effective for microbiology compared to sketchy micro. for usmle step 1, youre studying microbiology, a subject where exact memorization is important. the fact that i ended up doing pretty well in usmle step 1 despite not memorizing any microbiology facts is testament to picmonic. you want your brains to remember the core concepts, and sketchy micro is just not the media to get there. second, the folks who have used sketchy micro for microbiology are not used to using sketchy videos to study for medical school. for them, its just an untested concept that they arent used to. if they had been in the majority group, i think that the residents i worked with would have had more success using sketchymicro to remember microbiology. if youre a med student who is about to study for step 1 or 2, you need to use sketchymedical to make sure that youre not forgetting anything. for every problem, sketchy micro has a model that you can paste in to your picmonic to learn something. for sketchy video, you cannot learn as much from the actual lecture as you can from sketchy micro. there are many other ways to benefit from sketchy but, with the resources in the bag, you'll have no trouble filling the gaps in your knowledge for step 1 and 2.

sketchy is the best online educational resource i have used. i do all of my learning in the form of blogs, videos, and pictures (and anki of course). they are great for keeping your progress and where you are in med school. they also really help me maximize what i know and learn. the worst thing to do is ignore med school progress, and cheat on a test. i also use it for up and coming classes that i might learn in the future. it really helps keep my studying on track and allows me to learn at my own pace instead of studying one way for a whole semester and then completely forget how to do things. they are really awesome people and resources! sketchy medical doesnt provide a way to export your cards and content into a different format or a pdf, so if your sketchy deck isnt in the format you want, such as in an anki deck or as a pdf, you are out of luck. after just a few weeks, i knew i would never be able to memorize the new concepts with zanki. i felt like i was making so much progress but i felt like i was sinking into a pit because i could not memorize the old cards. i also noticed that sketchy and zanki were very similar. this made me feel like i was making no progress. i could not do my anki study between the two decks but i was trying to memorize as much as i could of what the sketchy cards were doing to me. i had to make a decision. should i quit? i had done this to myself by switching to zanki. then one morning, i was reading a forum online where a user said to the developer, this isn't like sketchy, i'm using this for a&p and i'm not sinking into a pit. what did he mean? that zanki was not created to be used for a&p? what was sketchy then? after working so hard to memorize sketchy and the old cards, i read an article in your printed journal while walking into the ob clinic on saturday morning. i read a zanki user have a great saturday and then finished quickly. i felt like this article was good proof that it is possible to use zanki for a&p because zanki and sketchy come from different directions in the same pathospective and use different tools to memorize everything. i felt that i did not have to give up the sketchy cards all together, only switch to using zanki. 5ec8ef588b
