Purification of the pyruvate dehydrogenase E1 component in bovine brain: separation of a new ATP-sensitive E1 component from the novel and stable E1 complex. We report the purification and characterization of the pyruvate dehydrogenase complex from bovine brain. The initial purification protocol, which employed cation exchange and hydrophobic chromatography, resulted in the isolation of two subcomplexes. Subsequent chromatographic separations of the initial complex based on a novel elution profile followed by N-terminal amino acid sequencing provided the purification of a novel, but stable, E1 component. The kinetic properties of the purified complex were compared to the properties of the purified E1 complex isolated from the E1-E2 complex of phosphorylated pyruvate dehydrogenase complex from rabbit muscle. It was concluded that the novel component was not the recently reported inorganic phosphate-sensitive E1 component (S. Akbarian, S. Desai, and H. Gilford (1990) Biochem. J. 271, 619-624). The new E1 complex contains one E1 component, which is sensitive to inhibition by the ADP analog 2,3-diphosphoglycerate, and a novel, stable, E1 component.Q: Validation not working on onChange event on RadioButtonList I have a RadioButtonList and I want to disable the button if
