Q: Warning when using default.Net 2.0 constructor So I am attempting to create a generic event handler (non system.events) and was advised by a friend that I should use the default.net 2.0 constructor for this task. So I tried this: public void SomeDelegate(object sender, EventArgs args) { Console.WriteLine("WOW"); Console.WriteLine(args.ToString()); } Problem is - I am getting the following warning: The using directive does not appear to be pointing to a name declared in the current scope. Perhaps a using directive is missing. This works fine, but this is a bit of an annoyance. Is there a way to suppress this warning? Thanks A: This warning is not something you can suppress. The compiler generates that warning because there is no using directive that could resolve the issue. Imagine this code: namespace Whatever { public class Whatever { } public class Foo {
