The next big feature for early 2020 will introduce the newly updated toolset. The improvements include new features based on “machine learning” and “AI technology” to help speed performance time, reduce the number of steps needed to complete tasks, and help you save time. In short, this provides a lot more keyboard shortcuts. Adobe is also introducing a new service called Ghost, which will allow any Photoshop stylist to access all of the user’s created content and open that new content directly from within Photoshop. The “Ghost” is described as a professional design service tool for Photoshop, allowing a user to collaborate on efforts, and edit content, all at the same time. Adobe Photoshop has been a major asset of the Adobe suite over the years, perhaps the most important of them all is Photoshop’s ability to create and alter pretty much any type of digital media, such as photos, videos, drawings, and more. It also provides a seemingly endless number of creative tools and effects you can use to alter just about any visual and creative work you put out there online. It’s not only reproducing basic photo editing (cropping, rotating, red-eye reduction, and so on) for consumers, but also what can be described as advanced usability enhancements. This includes layers, masks, and adjustment layers along with creating interchangeable graphics or graphics sets. Photoshop also includes most of the standard, but much more powerful retouching options you’d expect from an image editing application, like blurring, layer effects, filters, and other text tools for formatting. Along with the retouching tools, you also get a pretty impressive selection of high-end creative tools that allow users or designers to create everything from websites, to apps, to illustrations and animations.
