You have to simply type the URL of the website you want to take a snapshot of, and the program will then use your browser's capabilities to create a copy of the page in a different folder. As soon as you are done, the program will ask you whether you want to save the image as a PDF, JPEG, GIF or PNG, and then you can share it with your friends. For starters, you would have to be a billionaire to afford it, and secondly, people tend to just sit on their thumbs when it comes to using them. Now, one man in Germany has finally turned his attention to the portal gun as the latest application of his hands-on skills. Alex Timmermann has been practicing with his portal gun at his place of work. Once, a portal appeared at his desk that he has to get rid of. To do this, he hit the large button that creates the portal. And then, this portal turned around in the opposite direction, so he was able to move it across the room and shoot it at the wall with his portal gun. Now, as you can see in the video, this man is very strong. It took him around 5 seconds to throw the portal, but he did manage to pull it to the opposite direction. And once he had successfully shot it, he had to move it another 30 meters. So if this was your workstation, you would be very happy that this man decided to set his browser on autoscrolling mode. This portal gun was bought from eBay for $180. It has a built-in USB port, which is why it takes less than 5 seconds to recharge it. And it has a 32 GB storage, so you should be able to store a lot of files before you eventually need to recharge it again. In the patent application, the Apple Watch is used for the displaying of certain applications on a user's wrist. This is possible by utilizing the aforementioned wireless interface to communicate with the Bluetooth-enabled watch. Apple on the whole has been driving its smartwatch and headphones toward a unified approach for the foreseeable future, much like
