He then a music video for his song Little Things to release its. Pregnancy-associated plasma protein-A and placental protein-14 in women with Down syndrome. Pregnancy-associated plasma protein-A (PAPP-A) and placental protein 14 (PP14) are serological markers that predict fetal Down syndrome (DS) accurately. Because the results of these tests in women with DS are not conclusive, the purpose of this study was to determine the accuracy of the combined use of these markers to predict fetal DS. We measured the levels of PAPP-A and PP14 in the serum of 88 women with DS and in 60 normal women with an amniocentesis performed for karyotype analysis. The women with DS were divided into three groups depending on the karyotype analysis, and PP14 and PAPP-A levels were measured in each group. In total, 22 (25%) of the 88 women with DS were positive for both markers, and the other 66 were negative. The area under the receiver-operating characteristic curve for PP14-positive and PAPP-A-positive combined results was 0.98, and that for PP14-positive and PAPP-A-negative combined results was 0.93. The detection rate of fetal DS was higher for the PP14-positive and PAPP-A-positive combined results than for PP14-positive and PAPP-A-negative combined results (100% and 81.1%, respectively). The PP14 and PAPP-A levels in fetuses with trisomy 21 were significantly higher than those in the fetuses with
