This may happen if there is no project set up to build the specified configuration or if the configured build configuration has not been activated. Is it possible to fix this? A: Double click on your target. Select "Build Settings". Go down to "Build Options" and select "Build Active Configuration". This should correct your issue. Embryo Transfer in the Burmese Python (Python molurus bivittatus) by Hysterotomy and Laparoscopy: An Established Technique. Establishment of a service to routinely monitor embryo development and collect surplus blastocysts to facilitate embryo transfer (ET) in endangered New Zealand python (Python molurus bivittatus) is a goal for the commercial arm of a New Zealand wildlife genetics facility. Establishment of a technique that mimics ET in other reptilian species (Cheryl Kautsky and Peter Daws, unpublished). Embryo transfer in the snake is facilitated by laparoscopy and hysterotomy following the dorsal laparotomy approach commonly used for egg collection. Two snakes were anesthetized with ketamine hydrochloride and midazolam. The snake was sedated and placed on its ventral side. A circular incision was made in the peritoneum at the dorsal midline between the first and second ribs. The skin and underlying muscle were retracted, exposing the abdominal cavity. The incision was continued through the anterior abdominal wall until the pelvic inlet. Both ovaries, oviducts, and uteri were visible. The head of the snake was lifted up, and the abdomen was packed with cotton gauze. The uterine horn was seen at the pelvic inlet and stretched caudally. The uterus was incised at the cervical region, and a small cuplike incision was made in the uterine wall. The ovarian ovaries and oviducts were visible, with the oviduct entering the uterine horn. The uter
