You might have noticed that I haven't spoken about Sketch in depth yet, and don't see it as an app worthy of this showcase. The reason is because I don't like the approach of it at all. I love that I can have access to a raw photo with a little more work or thought that a finished photo. Airbrushing and basic design are fun, but sometimes I need to make a change. To do that you have to get into the menus, and the menus are ugly. If you're not willing to make the leap to the menus you're not going to do anything with it. It's that simple. The tablet screen is nice, although not really hand-held, because I haven't seen anything else like it. I could also say that the menus are easy, but they're not. Try using the menu with a pencil in hand and notice how hard it is to unintentionally change something by accident. That bumpy line in the middle, that's the menu, and it's not as easy to use as the original iPad. Yes, you're also using two apps at once, but I feel like the points of overlap are not well thought out. The best use of the tablet I've used so far is for on-the-ground sketching. On the one hand, it's great to be able to walk around a scene and sketch it out quickly. On the other hand, I don't want every thing I do and every thing I think to be shared among the software I use. I don't want to open PS just to unlock the Air view because that opens up the ability to adjust levels. I don't like that. Although the arrival of the new OS is not a complete overhaul, it does affect the interface; which, in turn, affects workflow. This could be an entire topic on its own, but suffice to say that I had to make a few adjustments. I'll help users by listing some of my personal adjustments here, which they can follow or change.
